INSURANCE Looking in the Lost and Found

Locating a Life Insurance Benefit When You Don't Have the Policy

Insurance policies are often purchased during life changing moments: the birth of a child, marriage, or purchase of real estate or other assets. You may find yourself trying to solve the mystery of a missing or "lost" life insurance policy. That task can be difficult - especially if you are assisting an elderly relative or helping settle an estate. The National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) offers these tips.

About Life Insurance

It's helpful to know the type of policy. Life insurance is generally issued as either a term policy or permanent life insurance policy.

A term policy covers the insured for a stated period of years and pays a benefit only if the insured dies within that term.

A permanent life insurance policy - also known as universal life, variable universal life and whole life - stays in force as long as the premium is paid. Even if a permanent life policy lapses (the insured stops making payment), it's possible there could be some residual benefit, though it may not be the full value.

What You'll Need

You'll need some personal details of the insured individual. An old copy of the policy will be most helpful. You'll need the full name (including maiden name for a married individual), Social Security number and the state in which the policy was purchased. To claim the benefit, you'll also need a copy of the death certificate.

Try to determine:

- ❖ Which insurance company might have issued the policy

- ❖ Which agent or broker might have sold the policy
- ❖ If your loved one might have purchased the policy through an employer, union, or association

A search online will help you find contact information. Talk with customer service representatives or human resources departments to see if they can provide the policy number and claims information.

Where to Look

You can also try one of these strategies:

- ❖ Look in files, safety deposit boxes and other storage areas for any insurance-related documents.
- ❖ Look through address books or online contact lists for any insurance listings (agent, company).
- ❖ Contact attorneys, accountants, investment advisors, bankers, business associates or any other financial advisors.
- ❖ Look for applications for any life insurance policy; it will likely list ALL life insurance policies belonging to your loved one.
- ❖ Check for canceled checks or bank statements for automatic payments to insurance companies.
- ❖ Review income tax returns for claims for interest earned on insurance policies.
- ❖ Talk with their auto or homeowners insurance agent. It's possible they also wrote the life insurance policy.

How to Avoid Lost Policies

Take these steps to make sure your beneficiaries won't have difficulty finding your life insurance policy:

- ❖ Update your beneficiary information. Make sure your company and agent have current contact details.
- ❖ Alert your beneficiaries of the policy. Provide them with your agent's name and the name of the company that wrote the policy.
- ❖ Make sure a current copy of your policy is with your will or estate paperwork in a safe place where your family or beneficiaries will know to look for it.
- ❖ Ask your insurance company for an annual policy statement, if one isn't provided.
